PARSHAT SH'LACH

By Rabbi Eli Lerner
Educational Staff

When B'nei Yisroel requested that Moshe send Meraglim to scout the Land of Israel, Hashem responded that the spies should be "Anoshém ... kol nasi bohem." They were all men of character, intelligence, perception, and courage, princes of their tribes. In short, people whose opinions were to be highly regarded.

When these M'raglim returned from their trip, the overwhelming majority reported that the situation was bleak and the conquest of Eretz Yisroel should not be attempted.

The majority opinion generally: nutebi but Calev and Yehoshua refused to go along. Despite the prestige of the others, Calev and Yehoshua rejected their report and spoke out forcefully against the majority. They knew that there was an obligation to oppose wrongdoing, irrelevant of the odds against them.

The consequences of following the crowd even when it is wrong are very apparent. All of B'nei Yisroel were punished and sentenced to perish in the Midbar. All... except Calev and Yehoshua who stood up for their beliefs.
